Dark Rich Colorings Are in Favor Just Now.

Dresamakers Returning to the Genula Leg o' Mutton Sleeves of Our Greadmothers - The Stylish Empire

[Special New York Letter.] There is a decided preference for dark rich colorings this season. The light gray and tan costumes so popular for several winters have given place to gowns of elegant simplicity (in all but cost), made of heavy rich silk, velvet or woolens of the velours, reps and boucle

The fancy for shot materials continues and the velvets and heavy bengalines are particularly effective in

The fur-trimmed velvet capes are the favorite garments of the season for street wear. The Breton is perhaps the most graceful model. It has a yoke piece and collar in one, and the cape part reaches to the hips and hangs eleser to the figure than many earlier styles, which is a decided improvement, as these gurments are usually made of velvet which, when too full, hangs in stiff, ungainly folds.

The double and treble capes edged with fur are worn, but I would recommend the shirred collar and small shoulder capes over the one long one as being much more becoming.

Every possible device known to dressmaking is being made to broaden the shoulder and chest effect. We have not sione returned to the genume leg o' mutton sleeve of our grandmothers, but there is a distinct tendency to lengthen the shoulder seam as of old and to insert the sleeve as far down on the round of the shoulder as a few years ago every effort was strained to bring the shoulder as near the ears as possible. To heighten the present effect the broadest revers yet worn are seen on the new gowns. In some cases they flare out several inches on to the sleeve in alarming proportions. There is a fancy for making sleeves of two or more different materials. In fact, the more the merrier, and it is no uncommon thing to be able to count no

The winter skirt model is not materially different in appearance, except for the length in back, but it is out on different lines, as shown in the diagram of the empire skirt illustrated here. The front and back are straight seamless lengths, slightly curved top and bottom as drawn. The side pieces are gored to almost nothing, which GEN. BUTLER'S law practice is said to gives the full gathers in the back with-

One of the novelties of this season is the red umbrella which on dreary gray days is carried with the storm gown-or ulater and when helsted casts a delicate glow over the face and figure which is rather startling amidst the duil surroundings, but withal quite attractive -if one cares to be attractive in that way. AN INDIAN TEMESCAL Semething About the Sweet-Houses of the California Indiana. The sweat-house (or "temescal," as it is called by the Spanish-speaking tribes) is generally a circular, domeshaped structure, made by phasting flexible poles around a circular excavation some two or three feet deep and from ten to fifteen in diameter. These poles are bent inward until they almost meet, leaving a smoke-hole in the cen-They are then interwoven with tules or rushes if in the lowlands, and brush and twige if in the foot-hills, leaving a hole in one side big enough for a man to crawl through. The whole is then plastered over with sticky adobe mud to the depth of four or five inches.

The sweat-house is usually built near the stream on which a village is invariably situated, and somewhat apart from the other "wikiyups." Its use is commonly that of a dance house or medicine lodge, wherein cures are supposed to be effected by the medicine men of the tribe, and the religious or medicine dances held.

But the most extraordinary use, and the one which gives it its name, is a ceremony conducted in the following manner: A fire is built in the center, and the smoke-hole closed over and made air-tight with mud. The devotees, stripped naked, range themselves in a circle round the fires. Then the door is closed and plastered with mad from the outside. The Indians, if it be in the central counties, begin a dance, going round and round the fire until they are in a state of profuse perspiration. They keep this up until they are obliged to stop from exhaustion; then gathering their strength for the final effort, they burst open the door, and, rushing out like angry bees from a hive, plunge into the neighboring stream.

Whether or not this does them good from a medical point of view I don't know, but it forms an exciting diversion for them, and makes them clean if nothing else, and cleanliness, as a rule, they sadly need. The sweat-house is on institution common to all the Indians of California inhabiting the coun try drained by the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers, and for all I know, by those west and northwest of Mount

I have described it to you, as nearly as I could, as it was when the white "gold-digger," coming over the lofty Sierras from the east found and in a great measure obliterated it. The temescal not only serves the purpose of a dance and melicine lodge, but is a general lounging place for the lazy men of All women are excluded on pain of death, excepting the favored few practising or studying medicine .-L.
